Ir has been proposed that the Senate should elect some one who is not a Sen-ator to the position of President of the Senate pro tem., with the duty of assum-ing the office of President of the United States in case of Grant's death before the expiration of his term. This curious suggestion is published in the Washing Chronicle. The reason given for the departure from settled custom is that the accession of a Senator to the Presidency, in the event of Grant's death. would too greatly diminish the Republican majority in the Upper House of Congress. It may be that, as the correspondent of the Chronicle says, there is no constitutional prohibition of the election of a pro tem. President of the Senate who a member of that body, but the unwritten law of custom may well be unwritten law of custom may well be taken as decisive on that point.
Once before in the history of our politics an attempt has been made to induce the Senate to boldly choose a President of the Senate to the Senate to boldly choose a President of the Senate to boldly choose a Presid duce the Senate to boldly choose a President of the United States. The success of that scheme was not such as to encourage even a modified repetition of it. It was in 1801, when Jefferson and Burr had each received 73 electoral votes for the Presidency, and the election; therefore, devolved upon the House of Representatives. The Federalists, who controlled half the State delegations, were unwilling to elect either candidate. They wished duce the Senate to boldly choose a Presihalf the State delegations, were unwilling sale of said lands and the manner of investing to prevent any election and then induce the Senate to choose a President. The plan was boldly denounced by their greatest leader, Hamilton, although Jefferson's request to the then President, Adams, to veto any bill for the purpose that might be passed was refused. Thedanger seemed so imminent that Jefferson went so far as to threaten armed re-At last, enough Federalists cast blank ballots to make him President.

It is the purpose of the organization to construct and operate a narrow-gauge railway from St. Clairsville to Neff's Siding, on the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad, a distance of six miles. The route is the easiest to build upon in all this region of country, and it is thought that this road can be built and stocked for about $35,000. A canvass for stock subscriptions will be commenced at once, and as soon as possible the line will be surveyed and located. When the requisite amount of stock is subscribed an organization will be effected and steps taken to secure the the right of way.

This is a movement of considerable importance to this city. Even though it extends only to Neff's, it will bring to this city much of the trade that now goes from St. Clairsville and vicinity to Bridgeport. The transit here will be much quicker than to Bridgeport—probably not over forty minutes, including the ordinary delay at Neff's, while it requires two and a half hours to reach Bridgeport—and the cost can not exceed thirty-five cents, while to Bridgeport it is now sixty-five.

The Immaculate Conception.

The Humaculate Conception.

From the Baltimore American of Vesterday.

To-day is the featival of the Immaculate Conception of the Blessed Virgin, and will be celebrated as such in the Catholic churches of this city, as well as in those in all parts of the world. It is a birthday of obligation, the faithful being required to attend mass as on Sundays. It is just twenty-one years since Pope Pins IX issued a solenn decree in Rome, in a numerous souncil of Bishops, declaring the doctrine of the immaculate conception to be an article of Catholic belief. This was done on the 8th of December, 1854, and since that time the church has observed in the Catholic Church since the seventh century, though great controversy existed as in what sense the Blessed Virgin was to be held conceived without sin. It is stated that St. Bernarm not only remonstrated with the canons of Lyon, in 1131, for their unauthorized introduction of this festival in their Catholical, but rejected the opinion of the Blessed Virgin's laving been conceived free from original sin, though he admitted her sanctification in her mother's womb. A protracted controversy now enaued. The Franciscan order, of which the celebrated theologian, John Duns Scotus, was a member, zealously defended the doctrine. The Dominican order, on the contrary, denied the immalculate conception, and this caused much discussion and division in the Church. The Scotus, in a disputation held be in the majority, however, and their leader, Scotus, in a disputation held be fore the University of Paris in 1307, maintained the doctrine of the immalculate conception in the highest degree. The dispute on the point grew so warm and caused so much excitement that Pope Pius V., toward the close of the sixteenth century, forbade all public discussion of the sublect, except in theological disputations before a learned auditory. This state of things continued for three or four centuries, while all the time the supporters of the doctrine were steadily gaining ground. Clement XI. ordained that the festival should be observed as a holiday of obligation, and a length Gregory XVI, permitted that the term "immaculate" should be introduced in the public service, the use of which had been before forbidden, Finally, at the local content in the being the public service, the use of which had been before forbidden, Finally, at the ordained that the festival should be observed as a holicay of obligation, and at length Gregory XVI. permitted that the term "immaculate" should be introduced in the public service, the use of which had been before forbidden. Finally, at the instance of bishops in various parts of the Church, the present Pope, Pius IX., addressed a circular to the bishops of each mation, calling for their opinion and that of their people as to the faith of the Church on the point. The replies were all but absolutely unanimous in favor of the doctrine, and upon receipt of these the Pops issued the decree alluded to above.
